

The Hand A Brain

Explorations in the Neuro-Fascial Matrix

Many years ago Peter Schwind and myself designed what came to be known as the “Touch Workshop”, which has since become a standard part of the Rolwing™ training.

The original idea behind the workshop was to treat Touch as a discipline in itself, and to explore the phenomena taking place at the interface between the practitioners hands/body and the physical being of our clients.

In the years since it has become my mission to deepen my understanding of these phenomena conceptually and practically, and in as human a way as possible. Each time I have presented a workshop or taught a training this understanding has become more and more refined, both in its application and in my ability to formulate it.

My conclusion: There are no limits to how far our sense of touch can be developed; and no place where we can say we have arrived. It is a journey of learning without end.

It would be my pleasure to share with you where I find myself today in this journey.

Content

This workshop will be composed of two main parts:

Part 1: Back to basics

During the first part we will practice and re-visit how to contact and be in dialogue with all structures which can be called connective tissue: Skin, fascia, septa, membranes, ligaments and periosteum.

Part 2: Practical application

During the second part we will explore these ways of working with the structures and goals of traditional Rolwing®.

Testimonials:

As a Rolfer I love to develop my hands and my touch in the clear Rolfing context. Harvey's workshop offered a safe learning environment to pick up different approaches of touch and special perception and to adjust them to my own hands, my own body use and my own state of knowledge and understanding. Despite all my "outside of Rolfing"- trainings I enjoyed to be back in our brilliant, clear Rolfing world.

Asmus Wanke.

Attending Harvey Burns' experimental workshop in London certainly helped me to move further away from the educational imprint of Rolfing® as moving and differentiating dense myofascial body masses by physical force. To acknowledge and appreciate a person's body space, its "air", to approach it respectfully and gently, with profound knowledge and clear intention, is what I so much enjoy about his way of working; and what I hope to develop and refine in my own Rolfing™ practice.

Harvey Burns

Certified Advanced Rolfer™ and Rolfing® Instructor
He began working as a Rolfer™ in 1985.

Before his career as a Rolfer™, Harvey worked as a professional percussionist with a widespread style repertoire. To him, Rolfing® means not only an effective and dynamic form of body work but also a means to support people in developing their creative potentials.
